Edmund Burke called the Press the Fourth Estate of the realm. I think he did not use this title for the Press thoughtlessly as social ruling group or class. The three Estates or Realms in England, Lords Spiritual (i.e, the Bishops in the House of Lords), the temporal (i.e, other Lords) and commons, (i.e, the common people). The Press has been rightly called the Fourth Estate as it also constitutes a ruling group or class like the Lords and Commons. It cannot be denied in a free country that the Press exercises good deal of influence in shaping public opinion and pointing out the weaknesses or defects of society or of Government, and in general bringing to light all those good or bad things in society which would have otherwise remained unnoticed. The power is not limited or put under any check. The Press, instead of, being controlled by anyone controls life and thought of a nation. Hence the Press constitutes an Estate by itself.

Obviously, thus power which the Press in a country wields depends upon the number of newspaper readers. It is the strongest tool of mass communication apart from the socio-political news, there are entertainment sections with funny cartoons and critical essays or articles. Freedom of Press should not be considered as a Licence to write and say anything against anybody. Even a free Press is supposed to have its code of ethics and conduct. It must not indulge in yellow journalism and character assassination.

- (a) Why does Edmund Burke call the Press the Fourth Estate ?
